

Yes. The current copy has a cool, slightly cheeky luxury-rental voice, but a few lines unintentionally position the house as primarily for families with children—especially “when three families travel together” and “two bunk rooms take the children.”

 lexistephens.git...

If you want this to appeal equally to professional groups, families, wedding parties, friend trips, reunions, young adults, golf trips, etc., I’d make the language more group-oriented and experience-focused without making it generic.

Here’s how I’d rewrite the main website copy:

Flamingo Destination

Your group getaway, steps from the Gulf.

Six bedrooms. Six full baths. A private pool with Gulf views. Private beach access just three minutes from the door. Room for up to 18 guests — plus a golf cart to make getting around easy.

Whether you’re gathering for a family vacation, friends’ getaway, celebration, reunion, retreat, or simply a week at the beach, Flamingo Destination gives everyone room to stay together without sacrificing their own space.

/ The house

Bring the whole group. There’s room for everyone.

With six bedrooms, six full baths, multiple gathering spaces, and accommodations for up to 18 guests, Flamingo Destination was designed for trips that are better when everyone can stay under one roof.

The flexible sleeping arrangements work for groups of all kinds, while six full bathrooms make getting ready for dinner, the beach, a night out, or an early meeting considerably easier.

Outside, your private pool and sun deck create a gathering place of their own, complete with Gulf views. Upstairs, a covered balcony extends off the main living space for morning coffee, evening drinks, or simply taking in the coastal air.

And when it's time for the beach? Your private access is only a three-minute walk away.

Everything you want in a group getaway:

- Private pool
 - Gulf views
 - Complimentary golf cart
 - Complimentary beach service
 - Private beach access — 3-minute walk
 - Six bedrooms & six full baths
 - Two bunk rooms
 - Multiple gathering spaces
 - Pets welcome
 - Community pool
 - Tennis & pickleball

/ The place

Close to everything. Just far enough from it.

Flamingo Destination sits in Avalon Beach in Miramar Beach, along Florida's Emerald Coast — where white-sand beaches meet clear Gulf water and there's always something to do nearby.

Start the morning at the beach, spend the afternoon by your private pool, take the golf cart out to explore, or get the group together for dinner nearby.

It's relaxed enough for a family beach week, spacious enough for a group getaway, and polished enough for a retreat or special occasion.

The destination changes. The group doesn't have to split up.

Your beach trip starts here.

Planning for two is easy. Planning for a group usually isn't.

Flamingo Destination makes the stay simple: accommodations for up to 18 guests, six bedrooms, six full bathrooms, a private pool, beach access, beach service, and a golf cart — all in one place.

Dates, current rates, and reservations are available through Beach Reunion.

Why I think this markets it better

The biggest change is that I wouldn't explicitly name every target demographic. Saying “perfect for families, professionals, young adults, bachelor/bachelorette parties...” starts to sound like an Airbnb SEO description. Instead, phrases like “group getaway,” “gathering,” “celebration,” “retreat,” and “friends’ getaway” let each audience see themselves there.

For example, the current line:

“Six bedrooms and six full baths — one each, which is the whole point when three families travel together.”

is clever, but it immediately tells a group of 12 friends, a corporate retreat, or a wedding party, this house wasn't really written for you.  lexistephens.git...

“Bring the whole group. There's room for everyone.” accomplishes the same thing without narrowing the audience.

I also really like keeping some of the site's existing personality. “The specifics, without the adjectives” and “Forty-seven photographs, zero filters” are memorable.  lexistephens.git... I wouldn't turn the whole thing into generic luxury-property language like “Experience unparalleled coastal elegance...” The current site feels much more distinctive than that.

One other thing: I'd strongly consider changing the hero from simply “Flamingo Destination” followed immediately by specs to a benefit-led line like “Your group getaway, steps from the Gulf.” Then the specs underneath prove it. That gives someone about 5 seconds to understand what this property is, who it's for, and why they should care.

If you want, I can also go section by section through the exact site you linked and rewrite every single piece of visible text, including the navigation/CTAs, specifically to make it feel like a professionally marketed vacation property rather than an Airbnb listing.
